Council opposes Prop. 74, but 70, 71 applauded

By Shelly Evans
Staff Writer

The San Luis Obispo City Council urged voters to oppose Proposition 74 at Tuesday's meeting and support Propositions 70 and 71 on the June 7 ballot.

A ballot initiative to improve the state's highways, Prop. 74 would authorize the sale of $1 billion of general obligation bonds for highway repair. General obligation bond monies are generated from county property taxes.

Councilmember Allen K. Settle's motion to oppose Prop. 74 was supported by the rest of the council on May 17.

"For the first time, (the state) is setting a bad precedent to use bonds," Settle said, arguing that improvement funds should come from the users of the state highways through gas tax.

"It's a political decision for the governor," Settle said. "He doesn't want to raise the gas tax."

Steve Henderson, assistant to the city administrative officer, said the state estimates $20 billion is needed to adequately repair state highways. He described the $1 billion allotment through Prop. 74 as a "patchwork approach" to solving an ongoing problem.

According to a council agenda report, a gasoline tax is more appropriate and preferred by the city because highway commuters will bear the financial burden of repairs.

Prop. 70, the Wildlife, Coastal and Park Land Conservation Bond Act, will authorize the purchase of land throughout the state for parkland acreage. If the initiative passes, San Luis Obispo County could receive $100,000 to $200,000 for the sale of Nipomo Dunes to the state, Henderson said.

The proposition allows for any land in the state to be bought and designated as open space, making it nearly impossible for developers to ever build on it, he said.

Two major arguments fuel opposition to Prop. 70, a council agenda report stated. Individual members of the state Assembly say the total package for land purchases is too expensive and could possibly cost taxpayers in excess of $1.3 billion. Also, opponents argue that there are no plans to provide public access for 84 percent of current state parkland, and that the $1.3 billion could better be used toward improving existing parks rather

Poly student to bike TransAmerica Trek

By John Alexiou
Staff Writer

A Cal Poly student plans to participate in a bike ride across the United States to benefit the American Lung Association.

Marina DeMattei, a full-time graduate student with a degree in biochemistry, will be among 300 cyclists in the seven-week, 3,425-mile TransAmerica Bicycle Trek June 6-July 22.

The trek from Seattle to Atlantic City, N.J., will raise more than $2 million to help the American Lung Association prevent and control lung diseases such as emphysema, lung cancer, chronic bronchitis and asthma.

"The Trek for me is a statement," she said. "I feel that people need to become more aware of the lung damage caused by poor air quality and smoking."

DeMattei, still $300 short on pledges from the $5,000 she must raise to make the ride, is confident she'll be able to rally the rest of the money, but isn't quite sure she's ready to average 75 miles a day on the road with a few 100-milers thrown in also.

"I really need to take some time out and mentally prepare for this," said DeMattei, thinking of her busy schedule. "There's going to be days where it's going to be really tough and I just hope that I can make it through those days."

Besides going to her Cal Poly classes, she is student-teaching eighth graders at Paulding Intermediate School in Arroyo Grande and working

CSU trustees approve $18 million arts center for three-way funding

By Christine Kohn
Staff Writer

The CSU Board of Trustees agreed Wednesday to support a jointly funded performing arts center for Cal Poly and the community.

Funded by the state, the city of San Luis Obispo and the Foundation for the Performing Arts Center, the $18 million cost will be shared on a two-thirds, one-sixth, one-sixth ratio, respectively, said Doug Gerard, executive dean in charge of Facilities Administration.

This would mean approximately $12 million from the state and $3 million from each of the other two partners.

In addition, authority was given to Chancellor W. Ann Reynolds to enter into further agreements needed for the joint funding.

"It really was the first step," said Gerard. "We'll have to go back to the trustees several times. We'll have to go back and ask them to appoint an architect and have the schematic design approved."

The 63,000-square-foot performing arts center, to be built next to the Cal Poly Theatre, will be about twice the theatre's size, said Gerard. It will include a main auditorium with 1,500 seats.

Construction is expected to begin in fall 1991 with completion by early 1994.

The next step in the planning of the project will be to form a seven-member board of directors, which will include three representatives from Cal Poly and two each from the city and Foundation for the Performing Arts Center.

Specific plans for the performing arts center will be compiled and later presented to the trustees.

Students may need 2nd language to graduate if A. Senate agrees

By Karen N. Smyth
Staff Writer

Competency in a second language may become an exit requirement for future Cal Poly grads.

This fall the statewide academic senate, representing the 19 California State University campuses, will decide upon a proposal from the Chancellor's Office which requires students to show speaking, listening comprehension and reading and writing skills in a language other than English. The plan will affect students on all CSU campuses beginning fall 1992.

William Little, head of the foreign languages department, said the statement calls for proficiency, not necessarily classroom work. Students will need to perform, and show an ability to function in, a language other than English. The plan will not only apply to commonly taught languages such as Spanish, French or German, but also to any language with which the student is culturally familiar.

Little said there will probably be standardized tests for Spanish, French, and German, but problems could result in finding a procedure to handle others. He said there are 2,000 languages in the world other than English, and at least 50 are used by students on campus, such as Farsi and many of the Asian languages.

According to a draft of the plan drawn at the beginning of April, there are a few ways students will be waived from the requirement. One way is to pass a national foreign language exam, such as the College Board Foreign Language Achievement Examination, the Modern Language Association Collegiate Examination, or the Advanced Placement Examination. A systemwide passing score will be determined for each exam by the CSU after consultation with the faculty.

Students who receive at least 120 hours of formal instruction in a foreign language while studying abroad for an accredited program, or have attended two years of an approved secondary school where English was not the primary language, will also be free from the requirement.

Students with speech or hearing impediments that specifically affect language abilities may fulfill the requirement by successfully completing alternative coursework in such fields as linguistics, foreign literature in translation, comparative cultures or American Sign Language. These waivers will be arranged through the foreign language department and handicapped student services.

Students may also be excused by majoring or

Alameda County makes panel to deal with water shortage

OAKLAND (AP) — Alameda County supervisors have created an advisory panel, apparently the first in the state, to help the county get through the water shortage.

Supervisors created the task force Tuesday at the request of the state Office of Emergency Services, which is seeking similar action from other counties throughout California.

Alameda County already has taken measures to deal with the effect of the drought on crops and livestock, Sheriff Charles Plummer said.

"(But) now the possible effects of the drought on all aspects of the county need to be addressed in a comprehensive, coordinated manner," Plummer told the Board of Supervisors.

The panel will be made up of 25 representatives.

Defense secretary gives OK to MX missile launch system

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Frank C. Carlucci has authorized full-scale development of a rail car launching system for the MX nuclear missile, the Pentagon said Wednesday.

Following the authorization, the Air Force awarded two development contracts totaling almost $329 million for the construction and testing of the missile-carrying, launch control and security rail cars that will be needed to make the 71-foot missile mobile, the announcement added.

A $167 million contract was awarded to Westinghouse Electric Corp.'s Marine Division in Sunnyvale to design, develop and test the missile launch car.

The second contract, worth $161.7 million, was awarded to Rockwell International Corp.'s Autonetics Electronics Systems Division in Anaheim.

Soviets: Chemical explosion not fuel for nuclear missile

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union acknowledged Wednesday that something exploded at one of its chemical factories last week, but denied U.S. claims that it was rocket fuel used for a new long-range nuclear missile.

Gennady I. Gerasimov, Foreign Ministry spokesman, said three people were killed and five injured in the explosion May 12 in a storage area of the plant at Pavlograd, about 500 miles southwest of Moscow in the Ukraine.

He said the chemicals involved were explosives used in civilian industry, not fuel for the new SS-24 intercontinental ballistic missile.

U.S. officials in Washington said Tuesday the Pavlograd plant is the sole facility for manufacturing the main rocket motors for the SS-24.

Former security guard gets death sentence for slaying

SAN JOSE (AP) — A former security guard has been sentenced to die in the gas chamber for the slaying of a high school girl after attacking her at the Hillsborough mansion where he worked.

David Allen Raley, 26, was sentenced Tuesday by Santa Clara County Superior Court Judge John Schatz, who followed through on the death penalty recommendation of jurors who heard the case after another jury deadlocked over the issue.

Raley was convicted last year of the 1985 murder of Jeanine Grinsell, 16, and the attempted murder of Grinsell's friend, Laurie McKenna, now 19.

He took the girls on an impromptu tour of the Carolands Chateau, a deserted 92-room mansion also called the Colby Mansion. He tricked them into going into an underground vault.

Senators fend off Republican try at Soviet treaty passage

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Wednesday overwhelmingly repelled the first attack by Republican conservatives on the U.S.-Soviet medium-range missile treaty.

The Senate voted 91-6 to shelve a bid by Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., to stop debate on the treaty on grounds that Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev was not duly authorized to sign it.

The Senate's rejection of that claim was the first test of intermediate-range Nuclear Forces or INF Treaty. The treaty would ban all U.S. and Soviet missiles with ranges of 300 to 3,400 miles.

Gorbachev's signature was invalid, Helms claimed, because he signed as general secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, not as a duly authorized representative of the Soviet state.

Gorbachev may pull troops to gain East-West support

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. officials say Kremlin leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev may withdraw 50,000 to 100,000 troops from Eastern Europe this year in a bid to win support for a new round of East-West negotiations on conventional forces.

A unilateral Soviet withdrawal of that scale would have "little impact strategically" said a U.S. official. But the political payoff could be immense in Western Europe, where polls show great enthusiasm for Gorbachev's foreign and domestic policies.

U.S. officials trying to anticipate Gorbachev's summit strategy have also detected hints that he will suggest a fifth summit meeting before Reagan leaves office in eight months. The projected sites are Vienna or Budapest.

Awards given for cultural donations

Cal Poly alumni Gerry and Peggy Peterson received awards recognizing their continuous contributions to the cultural environment of Cal Poly and San Luis Obispo. The awards were given at the Cal Poly Artsalute last month, a benefit for the Cal Poly Center for the Arts.

The Petersons, residents of San Luis Obispo County since 1947, received the first President's Award from Cal Poly President Warren Baker, an award which will be presented annually. They have supported the art community since 1948, contributing to activities ranging from rodeos to symphonies.

"Whenever there was an opportunity to help the community grow, we have done so," Peggy said. "Giving to the community

Council votes to cut trees to widen Madonna

By Karen N. Smyth
Staff Writer

The San Luis Obispo City Council is calling for the removal of trees along a frontage road to allow for the widening of Madonna Road.

The trees will be removed from the CalTrans frontage of Madonna Road as it approaches Higuera Street to permit one lane for right turns and two for left turns, the council decided on a 4-to-1 vote.

Before making their decision, councilmembers reviewed three other alternatives. The staff report, however, recommended a full project calling for a complete widening, tree removal and the installation of sidewalks. Other alternatives called for no widening, or widening and moving the sidewalk behind the trees.

Although the last alternative would have saved the trees and allowed for adequate handling of the vehicle and pedestrian traffic, CalTrans owns the land where the sidewalk would go. CalTrans had told city staff members that it would oppose sale of the property.

The approved plan was seen as having the primary advantage of providing for traffic needs now and in the future. It also takes advantage of a right-of-way, for which the city has already spent $50,000.

The trees will be replaced with landscaping in the form of smaller trees, flowering plants and shrubbery.

Councilmember Peg Pinard was opposed to the action and said the council should hold off from any tree removal in the interest of landscaping. Councilmember Allen Settle said the issue was a matter of "health, safety and welfare" and that there was no other choice.

In other action, the council decided to review and consider the 1988-1989 annual budget. Director of Finance William Statler said the city's financial position continues to one of "health but not wealth." Statler said the proposed budget for 1988-89 builds from the groundwork set forth in the last plan, and reflects only modest changes.

Statler said the primary changes were the review and adoption of a fire master plan, a five-year police services plan and an airport area specific plan. Also included was a "Park and Open Space Element." According to the staff report from Community Development Director Michael Multari, the element will provide for "an open space component addressing open areas for scenic, passive recreation and habitat protection purposes." The staff requested that $144,700 be allocated for the this purpose.

Another primary change from the last budget called for continued support for the Cal Poly liaison committee to improve community-university relations.

Statler said the proposed budget is strongly supportive of all of the council's major goals.

Demand for life- saving organs spurs Poly, UCSB donor drive

By Brenda Suppanz
Staff Writer

Students at Cal Poly and U.C. Santa Barbara have organized an Organ Donor Card Drive this week to make students aware that organs are much needed for transplants in order to save lives.

Brian Ternan, a member of Alpha Upsilon fraternity, organized the event at Cal Poly along with a friend who attends UCSB. "We got 3,000 organ donor cards from the DMV ... and decided to just pass them out on campus," Ternan said. He and fraternity members planned to pass the cards out in the University Union.

One of the reasons he became involved with the donor card drive, Ternan explained, is that he has a cousin who possibly needs a kidney transplant.

"I just think it's something so simple and so easy but at the same time, it's so vital ... I can't find any reason to not do it. When you're dead, you don't have any need for the organs any more," he said.

Pointing out that there is a great demand for organs, Ternan quoted some statistics from the American Council for Transplantation. He said that the demand in America for people awaiting organs includes: 300 hearts, 400 livers, 5,000 corneas and 9,000 kidneys. He added that according to the Regional Organ Procurement Agency at U.C.L.A., from San Luis Obispo to San Diego there is a need for 30 hearts, 31 livers and 750 kidneys.

Concerning the outcomes of transplant operations, Ternan said, "The cornea is considered routine. The other ones have become highly successful."

He said factors contributing to whether or not someone's organ can be transplanted include the donor's age, body size and blood type. "The odds are against people ever being used as a donor," he said, "because the situation has to be perfect." Also, the organ must be removed within six hours, or else it will die.

Because the conditions must be ideal for a successful transplant, Ternan said he believes the best way to provide the needed organs is to increase the amount of volunteers.

However, there are some reasons why people are afraid to donate their organs, Ternan said. To people who are concerned about whether or not it would jeopardize their chances of living, Ternan said that there is no way someone's organs can be used unless they are pronounced dead. No one associated with the organ transplants is authorized to make that judgment, he said, pointing out that the only transplant that can be performed from a living person is, "if you donate a kidney to a family member."

Another concern people may have is that their family members may not be comfortable donating their loved one's organs. To this Ternan said that "if your parents or family are really against it, they can veto."

Ternan also explained that the donor's body will not be disturbed much. "One girl said she did not want her body mangled when she died, but they don't do that. They take your organ and sew you back up just like a normal operation."

Pointing out that profits cannot be made through organ transplants, he assured that, "No one is allowed to sell them."

The DMV encourages the use of donor cards by sending one with every license renewal, Ternan said. All a person has to do if they want to participate is fill out the donor card and stick it to the back of his driver's license. A small sticker is placed on the

But to some troubled students, suicide seems only answer

By Karin Holtz

College is a time for people to find themselves and establish a balance in life. But some never find that balance and end up losing themselves in the struggle.

Death is tragic. Suicide can be more tragic, because it didn't have to be; it was a choice. And when the person who has committed it was a young college student who had yet to realize his potential, the tragedy seems to compound itself.

Fred Cutter, a doctor of psychology who wrote the book The Suicide Prevention Triangle, estimates that nationwide, 15 percent of college students less than 25 years old have attempted suicide. He said about one person actually commits suicide for every 40 people who attempt.

Cutter said a survey on youth suicide conducted by the Center for Disease Control found that 27.8 per 100,000 men aged 20-24 committed suicide between 1970 and 1980. For the same age group, 3.1 per 100,000 women killed themselves.

Twenty-one suicides occurred within the student population in the California State University system over the last three years, according to a survey on student suicide completed in March. Of these, three were from Cal Poly. Attempted suicides were reported of another 84 students in the system, 29 from Cal Poly. These statistics may be higher because often schools may never know that a student has committed suicide if it happens at break or if the information is not forwarded for some other reason.

Kerry Yamada, director of the Counseling Center, said he assumes that the number of Cal Poly suicides is probably lower than the number at a more urban school like UCLA or Cal State Northridge because students at an urban school may experience different kinds of pressures, like congestion and heavy traffic. He said there are also more distractions in more urban areas, and "any distraction, if you exaggerate it, can be a distraction away from schoolwork, which might in turn become a pressure."

Joan Cirone, nursing supervisor at the Health Center, said college students struggle with three developmental tasks, and problems with these are usually the reasons for student suicide.

The first task is to develop autonomy, Cirone said.

"Making independent decisions can be difficult for some people if parents have been making decisions all the time for a student," she said. "Then a student comes here and they are just kind of overwhelmed with all that they have to do and all they have to decide for themselves."

Developing mature, interpersonal relationships is the second task, Cirone said. But some people develop immature relationships instead, and lose themselves in them. Problems arise "if there is an immature interpersonal relationship and it creates stress in the relationship, and all this time you've been going with the person you closed off the rest of your life," she said. If the couple has a fight and one of them decides to end the relationship, the other one will feel that person was his or her whole world and now that world is gone.

The last task is to develop purpose, Cirone said. At this time a student decides on life goals, a value system, and personal morals. If someone finds themselves acting contrary to what they believe in, because of peer pressure for instance, self-esteem can be lost, with a devastating effect.

Development in all of these areas "can be a struggle for some people if they don't have good coping skills, ... a good sense of identity, and a good feeling about themselves," Cirone said.

'... People who commit suicide see that there is no option left'
—Kerry Yamada

Illustration by Grant Shaffer

Yamada said reasons for college suicide mainly stem from coping with the transition between dependence and independence.

"When that transition period occurs, the college period, (students) experience things that they may have been protected from to some extent previously," he said.

He said that some students sometimes overemphasize certain things in their lives, and that "people who get so involved (with one thing) in a way that it becomes an obsession with them can be in danger."

For example, he said an incoming freshman rushing a fraternity or sorority may get overinvolved and lose perspective, thinking it would be the end of the world if he or she doesn't get in.

Whatever the reason a person becomes suicidal, there is one trait all suicidal people have in common, Yamada said.

"If you cut across all the reasons and you ask what is the single ingredient that makes them go from being OK to not being OK, I think you'll find that people who commit suicide see that there is no option left." Everyone has felt down when tomorrow doesn't look all that good, Yamada said.

"If you push on that even further, where they say nothing they can do will make any difference in their life, then you can understand the dynamics involved (with a suicidal person)," he said. "When they feel that there is no option left, whether it's true or not, then maybe an escape is the only thing they can think of. Escape would be a final escape in this sense."

Yamada said the same idea also applies to people who attempt suicide just to get attention. In cases of these attention-getting gestures, he said, "They see no other way of getting attention. They don't see the options. They don't see that they can act or do things differently."

Chuck Floyd, a crisis worker at the County Mental Health Department, said suicidal people cannot bounce back from setbacks and have lost perspective on life because they have a personality disorder which causes them to see everything in black and white. These people are more at risk when a problem comes up because they cannot see the gray zone. There are no maybes, ifs, ands or buts; life is either good or bad, not anything in between.

Even if these personality traits are not recognized by others, there are other clues that a person may be suicidal.

Barbara Brady, a licensed psychologist, said the warning signals that people should pay attention to are "if a person hints around, saying things like 'You know, I don't think I want to be around' ... or if a person starts giving away things. If they're depressed, and they have problems and they also start giving away things, they're starting to get things set up so they can die."

"Sometimes a person has been depressed for a long time. Right before they commit suicide, they'll actually appear to be less depressed because they feel they're getting out of it."

If a person thinks a friend may be suicidal, he or she should be intrusive, said Cirone.

"Anytime you see any change in behavior in someone you know, I think it's wise to just say 'Hey, you seem kind of sad. Am I wrong about that?' and just get a feel for that," she said. "The person may put up their honor and just say 'No, no, everything's fine.' And you just say, 'Well, I do care.' Let them know that you're there to help."

Yamada said a discussion with the person may reveal how serious the problem is.

"If you listen and they talk, then they're still grasping at something," he said. "If you start talking about options and they actually listen and say 'Maybe I should try that,' that's a good clue. Any indication that they would be willing to follow through, including getting help for themselves, is also a good sign. But if you make suggestions and they turn you off completely by saying 'I've tried that and it doesn't work. Nothing's going to work for me anyway. Nobody cares,' and they're not responding, that's not a good sign."

"At some point in time you have to make a decision whether you're making enough points to hang on to that, or you've lost something and you need to get help. In most instances, I tell people don't fool around with this too long. The risk is too high."

If the person is still responding, then it is necessary to create the right atmosphere to help them, Yamada said. If someone who is confronting a very anxious person becomes nervous himself, then he is not going to be helpful, said Yamada. But if a calm atmosphere can be created, the suicidal person may in turn calm down, he said.

Cirone said a suicidal person needs to gain perspective, and other people can aid them.

"Help the person see that there are other things out there and that life can be more joyful," Cirone advised.

Usually people are suicidal for only short periods of time, according to Floyd. They just need to make it through the tough period and things will change around.

Brady said, "The sad thing about it is so much of the time it's something that could turn around. I've seen people that are just devastated over a girlfriend or boyfriend breaking up with them. They think they'll never have anyone again and three months later they're dating someone they think they might be in love with. And if you kill yourself when you're wiped out you don't give yourself a chance."

Floyd said there is hope of turning around suicidal people because most of them do not want to die. Suicidal people are ambivalent. Part of them wants to live and part wants to die. Counselors work to try to reach that part that wants to live.

But for some, suicide is a viable option, Floyd said. They methodically and systematically go about committing suicide. Chronic depression has worn down the part of them that wants to live.

Most of society does not accept suicide as a viable option, Floyd said, but at the same time society is set up in a way that doesn't seem to always discourage suicide.

"People don't prioritize personal relationships enough. They need to put themselves out there for others, but many don't want to get involved with other people's problems," Floyd said.

Brady said, "I had a client one time who had said somebody was kind of reaching out to her. He was just making small talk with her just about 'Oh, how did you do on the test ...' She said 'Gosh, he just wanted to talk and I knew it and I didn't talk with him and he killed himself.'"

"... I think it's wise to just say 'Hey, you seem kind of sad. Am I wrong about that?' The person may just say ... 'No, no, everything's fine.' And you just say, 'Well, I do care.'"

Wheelmen to host collegiate cycling nationals

Road race, criterium, time trial on tap this weekend

By Terry Lightfoot
Staff Writer

For the first time ever, a national collegiate cycling race will be held in San Luis Obispo this weekend, hosted by the Cal Poly Wheelmen.

The 1988 Collegiate Road Championships will be the first race at Cal Poly to match cyclists from five regions of the country. Jeb Thornburg, president of the Wheelmen, said 25 teams and 49 individual qualifiers will represent more than 110 colleges and universities from five conferences around the country.

"We're getting registration forms from more teams every day," he said.

The teams will consist of five men and three women qualifying through conference championships. Individuals not on qualifying teams will also be selected at the various conference championships.

Representing the Wheelmen are Craig Anderson, Michael Bennett, Robert Enzerink, Angelo Guinasso, Chris Pappas, Sheldon Smith, Mindy Trask and Elizabeth Vanderliet.

Thornburg said the race will bring all the regions together and help solidify cycling as a national sport.

The racing starts Saturday at noon with the Creston Road Race, which consists of two laps around a 32-mile course. On Sunday there will be an 11-mile team time trial near Cuesta College at 9 a.m., followed by the main event — the Criterium — on the Cal Poly campus beginning at 1 p.m.

The Cal Poly Wheelmen submitted a bid in November expressing interest in hosting the race. In February, the United States Collegiate Cycling

Student access to the parking lots behind the North Mountain and red brick dorms will be restricted Sunday as the national collegiate cycling championship criterium will be held on campus.

Entry and exit to the parking lots will be via Poly Canyon Road only.

5 ball players named all-CCAA

Four Mustang baseball players were named to the all-conference first team, while another was named to the second team, it was announced Wednesday.

Pitchers Erik Bratlien and Lee Hancock, first baseman Pat Kirby and outfielder Rich Shepperd were chosen for the first team, while catcher Doug Noce was named to the second team. The teams were chosen by the CCAA coaches.

Bratlien, a senior righthander, set a Cal Poly strikeout record this season with 140, and tied the single-season record for wins with his 10-7 mark.

Hancock, a junior lefthander, finished his season with a 2.62 ERA while striking out 117. His record: 7-9.

Shepperd, a junior, was a strong hitter for the Mustangs this season. He led the team in home runs, with 7, and in RBIs, with 51, and he finished the season hitting better than .360.

Kirby, a sophomore, played only half the season for the Mustangs. He hit nearly .370 in conference play while driving in 26 runs.

And Noce, also a sophomore, batted .315 for Cal Poly with one home run.

Cal Poly finished its season with a 28-26 overall record — 16-14 in CCAA — and one game short of being chosen for the NCAA playoffs.

22 track athletes competing at nationals in Texas

Meet winds up Saturday night

By Kelley Cummins
Staff Writer

The upper crust of Cal Poly's men's and women's track teams is competing at the NCAA Division II nationals in Texas this week.

Twenty-two of Cal Poly's finest track athletes are now in San Angelo, Texas, for the meet, which will end Saturday.

The women's team has won four national championships, but this year's title is expected to go to defending champion Abeline Christian, according to women's head coach Lance Harter.

Mustangs Teena Colebrook and Lesley White are favored for at least one national championship.

Colebrook is the defending champion of both the 800-meter and the 1,500-meter events. She set an NCAA Division II record in the 1,500-meters last year at 4:14.77, and her season best mark in the 800-meters is better than her winning time last year.

She will compete in both events in this meet.

White holds the CCAA title in the 5,000-meters, and is the defending NCAA Division II champion in the event. She will also compete in the 10,000-meters.

Aeron Arlin will run the 800-meters with Colebrook, while Sydney Thatcher will compete in the 1,500-meters.

Mustang Amanda Marks will join White in both events, and teammate Sherry Minkler will compete in both the 3,000-meters and the 5,000-meters.

Freshman Gina Albanese will run the 400-meter intermediate hurdles, and then teams with Colebrook, Arlin and Angela Lee in the 1,600-meter relay. Lee will also enter the long jump competition.

Cal Poly's Melissa White will throw the discus and the javelin at nationals, while teammate Celeste Paquette will toss the shot put.

Men's head coach Tom Henderson said his team's feeling coming into the meet is one of "going for the gold. The team feels great. Everything is falling into place. We're ready to do it."

In fact, there is a high possibility that many of the individual competitors will place between first and eighth place, which would make them 1988 all-Americans.

"The team here (in Texas) is the backbone. Everyone has a good chance to make the finals and score. This is what we've been working toward all year... It's finally here," said Henderson.

He added there were several impressive Cal Poly athletes who should place quite well in their events.

Mike Livingston has not only qualified for two events but has the fastest times in both the 10,000- and 5,000-meter races.

"To qualify in two events is great but to have such a high standing, now, that's very impressive," Henderson said.

Star pole vaulter Steve Horvath is also coming into the national track meet with the highest qualifying mark in the event.

Another top-seeded athlete is Chris Craig — ranked third in the 10,000-meters.

Other athletes who will be competing this week at nationals in more than one event are Mike King running in both the 400-meter intermediate hurdles and the 1,600-meter relay. Reggie Johnson will compete in both the 400-meter sprint and the 1,600-meter relay.

Rudy Huber and Brian Strieff complete the 1,600-meter team for the Mustangs.

Also competing in the pole vault will be Todd Arnett, Steve Williams and Steve Toney.

Michael Miner will race in the steeple chase, and Brant Warren will throw the javelin.

"We are all seated very well coming into the meet. These guys are the top bunch to begin with," Henderson said.

The team also has a chance to place in the overall team score. Henderson said, "If we have a very good meet then the team can place in the top five. If everything goes perfect, who knows. We're trying to get a good team score."

Laker's Magic: Too much Jazz for Utah?

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, accustomed to enjoying the NBA playoffs, have a chance to end the Utah Jazz's frivolity in the postseason competition Thursday night.

The Lakers, seeking to become the first team to win consecutive league championships since the Boston Celtics won their second in a row in 1968-69 and aiming to capture their fifth title during the 1980s, lead the Jazz 3-2 in their best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal series.

They can end the Jazz's season and advance to the conference finals by beating Utah in Game 6 at Salt Lake City.

The other Western Conference semifinal series also could end Thursday night, if the Dallas Mavericks, leading Denver 3-2, beat the Nuggets at Dallas.

If seventh games in those series are necessary, they would be played Saturday at Inglewood, Calif., and at Denver.

"We have a chance to close it on Thursday that we want to take advantage of," said Pat Riley, the Lakers' coach since early in the 1981-82 season.

"I know what our team is made of and we are not going to lie down and die, not going to give up," said Utah guard John Stockton, who scored 23 points and tied a playoff record with 24 assists in Tuesday night's 111-109 loss. "It's too much fun in the playoffs."

"Whether we win or lose, this has been the most fun experience for me since I've been playing basketball. Nothing can compare to it."

Utah is chasing its first NBA title.

Michael Cooper, the Lakers' super sub who had been held without a field goal for the game's first 47 minutes, hit the winning shot, a jumper from near the top of thtry, with seven seconds remaining in Game 5.

"They are one of the grittiest teams I have played against since I've been with the Lakers," said Cooper, who has been in the league since 1978. "They just keep battling back."

James Worthy led the Lakers with 27 points. Byron Scott contributed 24 and Magic Johnson had 20 points and 13 assists.

Thurl Bailey topped the Jazz with 28 points, while Karl Malone had 27 points and 16 rebounds.

Association and the Wheelmen finalized the bid and preparations began for the event, Thornburg said.

Housing for the cyclists will be available at the Camp San Luis National Guard Facility. The camp will serve as the race headquarters, providing orientation, food, updated race results, first aid, bike shop, entertainment and a Sunday evening awards banquet.

Thornburg said the camp resembles an "Olympic Village."

The event will be aired on COMCAST cable network in Los Angeles and some other independent television stations in California.

More than 10,000 spectators are expected at the Criterium on Sunday.

Student tries to 'ACE' entrepreneur club at Cal Poly

Difficulty in restarting organization plagues his efforts, but Brown is confident it will fly

By Jenny Lampman
Staff Writer

Starting a club on campus is much like starting a business, especially if it's the Association of Collegiate Entrepreneurs, better known as ACE.

Mark Brown, entrepreneur and engineering technology student, is trying to restart an ACE organization on campus which existed two years ago but has since diminished.

ACE is a non-profit corporation which works with students in 50 states and 23 countries and helps bring together the resources and information of the entrepreneurially minded. Its headquarters is in Wichita, Kansas. Through international and regional conferences, quarterly newspapers and an electronic networking service, ACE represents more than 250 universities throughout the world.

"It's all about promoting entrepreneurship. I'm trying to get members who are really interested in being an entrepreneur," said Brown.

"It's a base location to intermingle and share ideas, we don't take hands and guide them."

Brown joined an entrepreneur club at Cal Poly two years ago which merged with the ACE organization last winter quarter.

"There were about 60 members then," said Brown. "Most of them graduated in the spring and it eventually faded out."

But restarting the club hasn't been all that easy.

"I had some members working with me at the beginning of this year to get things moving along, but they got too busy and involved with other things," said Brown.

He also tried to promote the club during Poly Royal but ran out of resources. Coca-Cola was going to provide Brown with a booth but backed out at the last minute, he said.

"I sold T-shirts and got a lot of compliments but I don't think I

ACE is 'a base location to intermingle and share ideas, we don't take hands and guide them.'

— Mark Brown

displayed the word Poly Royal enough," and he inevitably lost money, he said.

There is also a lack of knowledge about the existence of the club.

"They recently had a conference (Innovation and Entrepreneurship conference last Friday) and the people putting it on didn't even realize there was ever such a club existing," said Brown.

Another problem with restarting the club is the misconception that there is a lucrative amount of money at the disposal of the members, Brown said.

"We have to pull all our own resources, and invest time," said Brown.

One thing about the club that distinguishes it from most other

Cal Poly clubs is that any profits that are made are equally split between the members and not put into a fund. Members of the club are also eligible to enter contests that are sponsored by ACE. The group that enters the best entrepreneurial business plan can win $1,000.

Brown would like to see his club interface with the American Marketing Association, the marketing club and the financing clubs.

"They're all facets of entrepreneurship," he said. "If we could connect, we could use all the information to implement ideas."

He has spoken with an ACE member at the University of California at Santa Barbara who was interested in combining the two ACE clubs. The ACE club at U.C. Santa Barbara has 29 members.

Members of the ACE organization are called "ACE pups" because all of the members are less than 30 years old.

"A lot of the ACE members are pretty prestigious," said Brown.

Famous ACE members include Debbi Fields, 29, president of Mrs. Fields Chocolate Chippery whose 1984 revenues amounted to $45 million and Brett Davis, 26, the chairman of Stockton Savings Association who started the firm at the age of 24. Its revenues in 1984 were $215 million.

Brown has delved into his own entrepreneurial career since he's been at school and is always in search of new ideas. Two years ago he worked with Hewlett-Packard on implementing a customer-service plan in San Luis Obispo. "It could have gotten off the ground but never did," he said. "If I would have known more about the financing it would have. You really learn by your mistakes and there's that 1 percent of ideas that work and that's what I'm looking for."

The four-legged homeless

Pets have chance for humane adoption

By Jenny Lampman
Staff Writer

It may seem cruel and inhumane, but Cal Poly students do it every year, especially at the end of spring quarter.

Hundreds of pets are expected to be abandoned by students graduating or going home for the summer.

"Right after spring quarter we are on daily calls to go pick up dogs and cats and other pets that have been abandoned," said Bob Dollahite, county animal regulation director.

Last spring quarter 350 animals were left homeless by students, 180 of them were left on the streets, in houses and dorms. The rest were either left at the Woods Humane Society and the county animal shelter or an unfortunate few were run over, eaten by larger animals or starved to death.

Due to the publicity on abandoned pets, the numbers have been decreasing, according to Dollahite. "But we're looking to further decrease the problem and eventually bring it to a stop," said Dollahite.

He advises anyone who has a pet he knows he cannot keep to either bring it to Woods Humane Society or to the county pound at no charge. Or, he can contact the Action for Animal Rights in Atascadero, which places pets in new homes.

"Just bring it to us, tell us a little bit about its history and it will have a much better chance of getting adopted than an animal we pick up and know nothing about," said Dollahite.

The other option is to give about a 30-day notice to the Action for Animal Rights and they can usually find a new home for the pet, he said.

Woods Humane Society, which receives about 30 percent of their animals from students who abandon them, keeps animals that once had owners and try to find new homes for them. The county pound handles animal control and takes in animals with unknown owners.

four nights a week at This Old House in San Luis Obispo.
DeMattei, who has been riding seriously for two years, says it's been difficult for her to spend as much time as she'd like preparing for the Trek because teaching is still her number-one priority.

"Training for me is just being able to get on my bike and just going for a ride," she said.

But riding her Trek Tri-Series 500 bike back and forth from Arroyo Grande to San Luis Obispo to teach as well as traversing parts of Cuesta Grade on her mountain bike have helped her begin to get in shape for the Trek.

Although she hasn't spent as many hours riding as some other cross country participants, she plans to buckle down with the notion that more pain while training in San Luis Obispo will ultimately mean less pain once the big ride begins.

Last year, nearly 200 cyclists raised more than $1 million in pledges, averaging $6,400 per person in the first TransAmerica Trek.

The upcoming ride is the largest coast-to-coast non-competitive cycling event in the nation.

The cyclists will ride from Seattle, through the rugged Cascade Mountains to Spokane, northeast across the panhandle of Idaho to Montana and Glacier National Park, then over the Great Plains through North Dakota and Minnesota.

They'll continue to Chicago, through Indiana and Ohio farmlands, to Pennsylvania, the Appalachian Mountains, then the boardwalk in Atlantic City.

Strangely, DeMattei will be the only participant from the city of San Luis Obispo — a community many cyclists like to call home because of the mild climate and open roads.

Although she will be joined by Atascadero resident Kent Welden, who she recently met with to discuss the upcoming trip, the prospect of cycling, camping and living with 300 strangers for seven weeks doesn't bother her.

Getting hit by a car or ripping out her knee concern her more, said DeMattei.

She hopes her experience in science, fixing bicycles and being trained as an emergency medical technician will make the Trek more interesting and safe for everyone involved, but her ultimate goal is to reach the East Coast.

"To make it and to be alive at the end is what will make the whole trip worthwhile," she said.

The couple supports the Mozart Festival, the San Luis Obispo Symphony and the Cal Poly Center for the Arts, to name a few. They also underwrite musicians and contribute to the Community Concert series.

"We're a team, we work together," she said. "It's a job of love. I work every day at it."

She said that Cal Poly is a part of the San Luis Obispo community and each of them have something substantial to give to the other. Cultural events offer an opportunity for the community to come together for a common goal, she said.

Peterson, who calls herself "an old Poly Dolly," entered the university in 1958 after Cal Poly began to accept women. She majored in social science, received her teaching credentials and later obtained a master's degree in social science and education.

The Petersons came to San Luis Obispo from San Diego after Gerry served in the Navy during World War II. He was Cal Poly's first, electronics student and later became an instructor for the electronics department. He started an amateur radio station, which is still in operation. All three of the Petersons' children and their son-in-law attended Cal Poly.

than buying more land.

Prop. 71 is a direct reaction to the Gann Initiative which set limits in 1978 on the amount of money a city could raise or spend. Proponents argue that the limit should be raised to make inflationary adjustments.

"The initial limit was too low," Henderson said. "This initiative will increase what we can spend."

If passed, the initiative will allow increased state revenues to be divided proportionally among cities on a per capita basis, Henderson said.

LANGUAGE

minoring in an officially declared foreign language, or by receiving a passing grade in an advanced class or a same-level exam in a classical language such as Ancient Greek, Latin, Hebrew, or Sanskrit.

Charles Crabb, chair of the Cal Poly Academic Senate, said although he feels a second language is "clearly desirable" and that the United States is one of a few countries without a significant foreign language requirement, he was a little reluctant to get excited about a systemwide decision. Crabb said he feels the requirement may be good for some majors such as political science or agriculture, but other departments may not feel a need for it.

"Curriculum is a function of the school and faculty; decisions should be made at that level," Crabb said.

He said a problem will occur with resource allocation.

"We can't just teach all the students at Cal Poly a foreign language," he said. He added that since allocations are formula-based, an increased number of faculty in the foreign language department would take faculty away from other departments.

Crabb said that the language requirement will also limit a student's ability to take on free electives.

Little said a similar foreign language requirement was submitted to the senate five years ago and was defeated by a large margin. The main criticism of the last proposal, he said, was that it specifically asked for "increased teaching duties in the foreign languages department." Little said that this time the proposal has a better chance since interest in foreign language requirements is increasing.

"The foreign languages department teaches 3.5 percent of the students," he said. "This is too great a university, with a large responsibility to California and the world in a global village to have only 3.5 percent actively engaged in learning what will improve the university, enhance one's career, international life, and so on."

The foreign languages department offers courses in Spanish, French, German, and Italian. Japanese will be added in the fall. Liberal studies and journalism are the only Cal Poly departments which now have some foreign language requirement.

front of the card to identify the person as a donor.

Andy Gilkison, a student who helped pass out cards, said the response was good.

"About 75 percent of the people took them. A lot of people said they had them already... No one said they didn't want them."

The cards will be passed out on campus through today but people can also pick them up at the DMV at any time.

Ternan said he hopes to make this an annual event. "Next year we're hoping to get more schools like U.C.L.A., so that we can have all of Southern California do it," he said.

The Petersons have contributed much money for the Center for the Arts. They recently donated a $100,000 piece of property to the Foundation for the Performing Arts.

Currently, the Petersons are involved in the development of an $18,000 performing arts center, which the CSU Board of Trustees approved Wednesday. The performing arts center is designed to serve both the university and the community and is expected to be completed in 1991-92. Cal Poly agreed to participate in the project with help from the city and the Foundation for the Performing Arts.

Peggy Peterson said it is "wonderful" for the community to come together as a single body. She described her feelings of community involvement by quoting a poet who once wrote, "Community is a single soul dwelling in many bodies."

The Student Art Award, also presented at the Cal Poly Art-salute, went to Lori Vix, ASI Program Board head, for her involvement in the arts during her enrollment at Cal Poly.
